THE ORIGIN, PROGRESS, AND PRESENT STATE OF THE PEERAGE of ENGLAND.

THE late increase of Peers induced the following remarks on the Origin and Progress of the Nobility of England, under the different reigns of William the Conqueror and his successors. That the Barons of England were powerful before the Conquest, is clear from Harold Earl of Kent's being able to seize the crown, upon the death of Edward the Confessor; but their greatest power arose from WILLIAM the Conqueror, who, not considering the trouble they might give his descendants, gave English manors in a very profuse manner to his followers, with extensive power: To Hugh Lupus, in 1070, he gave the title and Earldom of Chester, to hold as he held the crown, (by the sword) to enable him to keep the Welch in awe. The whole county of Durham, with the title of Cumberland, he gave to Walcher, the Bishop, in 1076; one of whose successors was hardy enough to take up arms against Richard I. who defeated and took him prisoner; and upon the Pope's demanding his enlargement, as a son of the Church, the King sent the Bishop's armour; upon which he wrote, "See if this be thy son's coat," to Rome, which silenced his Holiness.

A Not-

Notwithstanding William gave them such power, he admitted upwards of twenty to the dignity of Earl, (Earlea, or Ealdermen, and sometimes Aldermen, and other names) which title was known among the Saxons, and even the Romans; but they were officiary, and their offices not hereditary, till the Norman Conquest: Earldoms then began to be feudal, hereditary, and patrimonial. At first they descended to heirs general, but from the time of Edward I. they have usually been limited to heirs-male. Those who were then made Earls, were frequently of the Blood Royal; for which reason our monarchs call them in all public writings, Our most dear Cousin. They then had for the support of their state, the third penny out of the Sheriff's-court, issuing out of the pleas of the shire whereof they had their title, for at that time there were no Earls (or Counts) but had a county or shire for his Earldom; but afterwards the number of Earls increasing, they took their title from some eminent town, or even a village, their own seat or park, and some from illustrious families.

WILLIAM RUFUS conferred this dignity but on four families.

HENRY I. only on five.

Indeed, STEPHEN's situation obliged him to indulge his adherents, on fifteen of whom he bestowed the title; and MAUD, his opponent, advanced four others, amongst whom was the Earl of Hereford in 1141, being the first created by patent; the general rule being by writ of summons.

HENRY II. added ten Peers during his reign, among whom was Malcolm, King of Scotland, created Earl of Huntingdon 1154.

RICHARD I. made only six Peers, among whom was Otho Duke of Saxony, created Earl of York June 24, 1190. He was the first King of England who carried in his shield Three Lions Passant, and in his reign coats of arms came to be hereditary in families, they owing their origin to the Croisades.

JOHN created eight Peers, among whom was Guy de Thouars, Duke of Bretagne, created Earl of Richmond Richmond 1216. He granted the privilege to the Barons of Kinsale, of being covered in the presence of his Sovereign.

The long reign of HENRY III. produced nineteen fresh created Earls; amongst whom was Richard Plantagenet, the King's brother, esteemed the richest subject in Europe, and on that account elected King of the Romans, who had no higher title than that of Earl of Cornwall. The great Edmund Plantagenet, a Prince of the Blood, (who had 2000 men in his retinue) was only Earl of Lancaster.

Before the 49th of Henry III. (1265), the antient Parliaments consisted of the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Earls, and Barons; which last title, Edward the Confessor introduced out of Normandy; from which time the title of Thane, (signifying the same degree of persons) began to grow out of use. The title of Baron was by no means so honourable at first, as it has become since; the citizens of London, and other places, having antiently been stiled Barons. In process of time, the whole body of the nobility were included in the term Barons; of which there were two sorts, the Greater Barons, or the King's Chief Tenants, who held of him in capite by Barony; and the Lesser Barons, who held of the first by Military Service, in capite. The former had summons to Parliament by several writs from the King; and the latter had a general summons from the Sheriff in each county. Both sorts were reputed noble, and sat in one assembly.

In the Conqueror's time, according to Dugdale, "he who had not 40 hides of land, or 3840 acres, was not reputed a Baron." Yet Camden, speaking of the same time, says, "they were accounted Barons who held their lands by an entire Barony, which is 13 Knights fees and a third," supposed to have been equal to 4 or 5000 pounds per ann. present money. It is possible, the former may speak of the qualification of the Lesser Barons, and the latter of the Greater. It is said indeed, that all the King's Barons, or free Tenants, who had jurisdiction over their homagers, which we call court-baron, were antiently entitled to sit in the great council or Parliament. The Lesser Barons being very numerous, and the Greater Barons very powerful, both by their attendants and their own number, in a parliament at Oxford in 1238, extorted Henry III. into concessions, which in a great measure stripped him of his power; and a few years afterwards, in 1265, they defeated him and his son at Lewes, where he was made prisoner by the Barons, headed by Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester. The victors themselves being now afraid of the consequence of such another tumultuous meeting; instead of keeping to the old form, summoned not all, but only those of the Greater Barons, who were of their party; and, instead of the Lesser Barons, who used also to come with large retinues, they ordered the Sheriffs in each county, to cause two Knights in every shire to be chosen; and one or two Burgesses for each borough, to represent the body of the people residing in those counties and boroughs. Which method has been observed ever since. This was the origin of the House of Commons. The King, recovering his liberty, not only followed their precedent, but is supposed to have gone farther; and to be the first who sent writs of summons to some that were not Barons by tenure, to sit inter Barones, on account of their quality or prudence. This new mode, of calling some Barons to Parliament, omitting others, and adding whoever the King pleased to the number, tended too much to increase the power of the crown not to be followed by Edward I. and his successors. The Barons by tenure, were by these means effectually humbled. Their seats in Parliament were become a matter of grace, not of right; and, from this time properly, were no ways necessary either to the commencement or continuance of a Peerage; than which there cannot be a greater absurdity. Camden says, that Henry III. reckoned 150 Baronies in England; meaning, no doubt, Greater Baronies; but the method, thod, above-mentioned, leſſened the number, or rather made it uncertain.

EDWARD I. in 25 years, created but three Earls. There were ſeveral, in this and the following Reigns, that had ſummons to Parliament, without actual creation.

EDWARD II. created but ſix more; three of whom were of Blood-Royal. He ſuppreſſed the Order of Knights Templars, in June 1308.

EDWARD III. firſt conferred the title of Duke, which he did in 1337, on his ſon EDWARD the BLACK PRINCE, who was created Duke of Cornwall; and in 1359 Edward conferred the ſame dignity on his couſin Henry Plantagenet, ſon of the great Earl of Lancaſter, and father of Blanch, wife of John of Gaunt. He alſo in 1362, created his ſon Lionel Duke of Clarence, and John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter on the death of the above Henry, his father-in-law, to whom by right of his wife he was heir. It ſhould be remembered, that Edward III. was the firſt of our Kings who aſſumed the title of King of France, dropping that of Duke of Aquitain; as Henry III. had before quitted that of Normandy, and at the ſame time quartered the Fleurs de Lis with the Arms of England. So long as the title of Duke made a conſpicuous part of their own ſtile, it is no wonder that they did not attempt beſtowing it upon ſubjects.

The title of Duke, however, was conferred very ſparingly for many ages after; and ſeldom on any that were not ſome way allied to the crown; as was Mowbray Duke of Norfolk, deſcended from Thomas de Brotherton, in whoſe right the Dukes of Norfolk now quarter the royal arms of England. De la Pole, Duke of Suffolk was alſo allied to the crown; and Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, was deſcended from Humphry Duke of Glouceſter; on which account, the late Earls of Stafford quartered the royal arms of England and France, within a ſilver border; which arms are alſo quartered by the Earls of Huntingdon and Ferrers, as being deſcended from legitimate ſons of the Kings of England; passing unnoticed the natural children of later sovereigns. Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, married the Queen Dowager of France, sister to Henry VIII. and Grey Duke of Suffolk, married the only daughter by that marriage. Seymour Duke of Somerset was uncle to Edward VI. If I mistake not, Villiers Duke of Buckingham, was the first Duke not allied to the crown, except Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, whose son, Lord Guildford, had married Lady Jane Grey, to whom Edward VI. bequeathed the crown.

EDWARD III. crowned William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, King of the Isle of Man, in October 1343; and besides the four Dukes already mentioned, he conferred the dignity of Earl on only eighteen in the course of fifty years reign; but he instituted the Order of the Garter, whose number of Knights must not exceed 26, including the Sovereign. During this reign, 51 received this noble order; which since has become so eminent, that there is no Royal or Princely Family in Europe, but has at one time or other since its institution, thought it an honour to be admitted into the number of its companions.

RICHARD II. his grandson, bestowed in 1397, the first title of Duchess of Norfolk on Mary Plantagenet, and that of Duke on seven. He twice conferred the title of Marquis, first on Robert De Vere, whom he created Marquis of Dublin and Duke of Ireland, (English titles) in 1385; and, in 1387, first created a Baron by patent in John de Beauchamp, Baron Beauchamp; besides those, he created eight Earls. At his Coronation, a Champion is first mentioned to have been introduced.

A Barony by patent goes to the heir-male, being almost universally so limited; but a Barony by writ, goes to the heirs-general; and, in case of more female heirs than one, it becomes in abeyance; when the King may make his option, and grant it to which of them he thinks fit. The more antient Baronies of this kind, are sometimes very properly called Baronies by prescription; for the writ of summons, at least for a time, are said to have been pro hâc vice tantum; and it is well known, that several persons and families, have been once or oftener summoned and afterwards omitted.

HENRY IV. during a reign of 13 years and a half, created one Duke and four Earls.

HENRY V. who reigned 9 years and a half, created three Dukes and five Earls.

HENRY VI. whose reign extended to 38 years and a half, created eight Dukes, two Marquisses, eleven Earls, three Viscounts, (the first of whom was John Beaumont, Viscount Beaumont, in 1439) and thirteen Barons.

EDWARD IV. in a troublesome reign of 24 years, created four Dukes, two Marquisses, nine Earls, two Viscounts, and five Barons.

EDWARD V.'s short reign produced no new creation.

RICHARD III. who reigned not quite 3 years, created one Duke, two Earls, and one Viscount.

On the accession of HENRY VII. the number of Peers were reduced in all to fifty; consisting of the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Marquis of Dorset, fifteen Earls, one Viscount, and about thirty Barons. Besides the Duke of Buckingham and the Earl of Devonshire, the Viscount Beaumont, and the Lady Hungerford restored soon after. His creations were few, being too intent in destroying their power to increase their number. Blood Royal excepted, he made but one Duke, Jasper de Hatfield, his father's brother, Duke of Bedford; and but one Marquis, Berkeley Marquis of Berkeley. He created but two Earls, Stanley Earl of Derby, and De Chandew Earl of Bath; no more than one Viscount, with eight Barons, in a reign of 23 years. At his death there were the Duke of Buckingham, the Marquis of Berkeley, ten or eleven Earls, no Viscounts, and about thirty Barons.

HENRY VIII. besides Margaret, Countess of Salisbury of the Blood Royal, created only two Dukes, Brandon Duke of Suffolk, and Fitzroy Duke of Richmond

mond and Somerset. One Marquis, Courtenay, Marquis of Exeter; Anne Bulleyn, Marchioness of Pembroke; fourteen Earls, four Viscounts, and about twenty Barons. He restored the Duke of Norfolk and Lord Berkeley, and revived the title of Lord D'Arcey, which had been in abeyance. His reign was long (37 years), and there were several attainders. At his death there were no more than one Duke, Suffolk; one Marquis, Dorset; fifteen Earls; one Viscount, and about thirty-three Barons; by which it appears, that the increase of lay peers in his time was but small, much less than one might have expected, considering how greatly he had added to the property of the laity, and how much he had reduced the Ecclesiastical Bench. In the room of twenty-five parliamentary Abbots and two Priors, he added only six to the number of Bishops. Five of the sees erected by himself still remain, but that of Westminster had only one Bishop, and continued but nine years.

EDWARD VI. in his short reign of but 7 years, created Seymour, Duke of Somerset; Grey, Duke of Suffolk; Dudley, Duke of Northumberland; Parre, Marquis of Northampton; and Paulet, Marquis of Winchester. The title of Earl he conferred five times, that of Viscount once, and made eight Barons, besides restoring the Lords Stafford and D'Arcey, and summoning Lord Russel in his father's life-time. At his decease there were the Dukes of Suffolk and Northumberland, the Marquisses of Northampton and Winchester, fifteen Earls, one Viscount, and about thirty-seven Barons.

MARY, who reigned 5 years, restored the Howards to the Dukedom of Norfolk, the Courtenays to the Marquisate of Exeter, and the Percys to the Earldom of Northumberland. She granted the privilege of being covered in her presence to the Earl of Sussex, who had been her General, but conferred no title above that of Viscount. Her creations were Brown, Viscount Montacute, and five Barons.

ELIZABETH,

ELIZABETH, who reigned about 44 years, found at her accession, one Duke, Norfolk; one Marquis, Winchester; fifteen Earls, two Viscounts, and thirty-eight Barons, in all fifty-seven Peers. She created no more than five Earls, one Viscount, and seven or eight Barons. She restored the Marquis of Northampton, and Lords Dacre of the South, and Stourton; and the Seymour and Dudley families to the Earldoms of Hertford and Warwick. At her death, the number of Peers was nearly the same as at her accession; she leaving one Marquis, Winchester; sixteen Earls, two Viscounts, and about thirty-seven Barons, in all fifty-six Peers. Queen Elizabeth had too much of the wisdom of her grandfather, to set up a power he had pulled down: She did not even ennoble Sir Nicholas Bacon, father of her Lord Chancellor, who was her Lord Keeper; and rather chose to confer the honour of the Garter on Sir Philip Sidney, who refused the crown of Poland at her request, than make him a Peer: She conferred no higher title than that of Baron Hunsdon on Henry Cary, her first cousin; and his cousin Henry, who was a great favourite with her, and carried the news of her death to King James, had his peerage from him.

JAMES I. her successor, who reigned 22 years, was fond of giving titles. He made indeed, exclusive of the Blood Royal, but two Dukes; Stuart, Duke of Richmond; and Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. The title of Marquis he conferred but once, which was on George Villiers, afterwards Duke of Buckingham; but that of Earl twenty-nine times, Viscount ten times, and Baron near thirty times. The Earls of Arundel, Southampton, and Essex, and the Lord Paget, were restored in the first year of his reign; and Villiers, Duke of Buckingham's mother, was made a Countess for life in 1618; and the widow of Sir Moyle Finch, Viscountess Maidstone, 1623. Besides James's vanity, and the probable motive of attaching the great commoners to himself and his family, another reason may be given for his being so lavish of his honours.

In

In Scotland, where he was bred, nobility was a thing of leſs conſequence and ſplendor than in this part of the Iſland. The Peers there always ſat in the ſame aſſembly with the Commons, by whom they might at any time be out-voted and controlled; and, however antient and honourable their families might be, they were in general much inferior to the Engliſh Lords in point of fortune. In a political view, the King was right in multiplying the Peers. The national wealth was increaſed, the Commons were rather too great, and the Houſe of Peers wanted to be ſtrengthened. Perhaps, in ſome inſtances, his favours might have been beſtowed more diſcreetly. The moſt exceptionable part of his conduct in this matter, ſeems to have been the giving away the titles of ſome of the moſt illuſtrious Engliſh families, who had the misfortune of being under attainder. His giving the title of Devonſhire, firſt, to Lord Montjoy, and then to Lord Cavendiſh, deprived the Courtenays of enjoying their antient honours. Again, by his giving the title of Weſtmoreland to the Fanes; the Neville's, Lords Abergavenny, have hitherto been cut off from being reſtored to their antient honour of Earl of Weſtmoreland. The Grey's, Earls of Stamford, in like manner, are deprived of being reinſtated to their title of Marquis, by James's making Sackville, Lord Buckhurſt, Earl of Dorſet. The Howards were ſpared; yet the Earl of Arundel, fearing leſt his title of Norfolk might be given away, obtained the favour of being created Earl of that county in the next reign; and the Seymours had the good fortune to ſee Carr, who had got their title of Somerſet, die without male iſſue; by which means, thoſe two moſt noble families were reſtored to their antient titles, and the honour of the Peerage. During the reign of James, in 1611, he inſtituted the Order of Baronets, which at firſt was not intended to exceed 200, but he exceeded that number by 5 or 6. His ſon, Charles I. increaſed them to 250, and Charles II. made near 430. Till about the Revolution the number was upon the increaſe, but has fluctuated very much ever ever since; however, their number at present is upwards of 520. When James died, the lay-peerage consisted of the Duke of Buckingham, the Marquis of Winchester, forty-two Earls, eleven Viscounts, one Viscountess, about forty-eight Barons, and Lady Dorothy Spencer. So that in this reign, the number was almost doubled, being advanced from about fifty-six to one hundred and five.

CHARLES I. whose troublesome reign continued 24 years, besides the Duke of York his son, and Prince Rupert his nephew Duke of Cumberland, he created the Duchess of Dudley; and James Stuart, Duke of Richmond; the Earls of Worcester, Hertford, and Newcastle, Marquisses of those places; and the Earl of Kingston, Marquis of Dorchester. He conferred the title of Earl or Countess on thirty-five persons, the title of Viscount on eight, and near fifty Barons and Baronesses. He instituted the Order of Nova Scotia Baronets in 1625, from which time to the Union, there were 230 created; but their number is now greatly reduced. At the time of his untimely death, there were two Dukes, four Marquisses, sixty Earls, seven Viscounts, and sixty Barons; in all one hundred and thirty-three Peers, exclusive of the Royal family.

CHARLES II. at his Restoration had only five less, having made two Earls and four Barons during his exclusion. During his reign, he created two of his mistresses Duchesses, and six of their offspring Dukes; which, with nine others, made fifteen Dukes, one Marquis, thirty-four Earls, three Countesses, six Viscounts, two Viscountesses, twenty-seven Barons, and two Baronesses, in all ninety-three Peers and Peeresses. He granted the Viscounts and Barons Coronets, whose surpages before could not be distinguished from common; many of whom, as being descendants of Knights of the Garter and Bath, were equally intitled to supporters, as some Baronets are by grants from the Crown.

JAMES.

JAMES II. whose reign was but 4 years, added one Duke, (Berwick); one Marquis, (Powis); two Earls, two Countesses, and five Barons.

WILLIAM III. and MARY, who reigned 13 years, being unable to gratify all the great men who were concerned in the Revolution, had recourse to the raising powerful Earls to the title of Duke, and powerful Barons to that of Earl. He created eight Dukes, one Marquis, eighteen Earls, three Viscounts, and nine Barons.

ANNE, who reigned 13 years, was by no means sparing of honours. She created six Dukes before the Union, and the Dukes of Dover and Brandon after, whose seats in the house were then denied, but Brandon is since allowed in 1782. Before the Union she also had created two Marquisses, five Earls, and seven Barons. At the Union, which took place in 1706, there were twenty-two Dukes, three Marquisses, sixty-seven Earls, nine Viscounts, fifty-eight Barons, besides six Peeresses in their own right; so that the whole number of lay-peerages was then 165, or thereabouts. At the Queen's death they were one hundred and seventy-two.

GEORGE I. whose reign was 13 years, at his accession was much in the same situation as Charles II. and William III. He created four of the Blood-Royal Dukes, and ten more of his nobles to the same dignity, besides the Duchess of Kendal, sixteen Earls, three Countesses, nine Viscounts, one Viscountess, and nine Barons; and at his death, the Peers amounted to one hundred and eighty-seven. In 1725, George I. revived the Order of the Knights of the Bath, which had laid dormant from the Coronation of Charles II. The antiquity of this Order is very considerable, being first introduced into England by the Saxons. The first created at Coronations, was Oct. 13, 1399, by Henry IV.

GEORGE II. who reigned 33 years, had not the same reasons for indulgence to his nobles; therefore he conferred the title of Duke, upon none but his ved grandſon Edward Duke of York; and the tional title of Duke of Newcaſtle-under-line, to late Grace of Newcaſtle, with remainder to the of Lincoln his nephew, his preſent Grace. His eſty created the Marquis of Rockingham, and chioneſs De Grey, thirty-two Earls, two Viſ-nts, one Counteſs, one Viſcounteſs, thirty-four ons, and one Baroneſs. At the deceaſe of his late eſty, there were, including Blood-Royal, twenty-e Dukes, one Marquis, one Marchioneſs, ſeventy-e Earls, eleven Viſcounts, ſixty Barons, and nine reſſes in their own right; in all, one hundred and ty-four Peers and Peereſſes.

GEORGE III. aſcended the throne in 1760, and ing at this time eight ſons and two brothers, to om no higher title can be given than Duke, will readily confer it on a ſubject; the Dukes of Normberland and Montagu being the only ones hitherto nguiſhed by that honour; beſides admitting the m of the Duke of Hamilton to the title of Bran-

Captain General of the Honourable the Artillery Company of London, High Steward of Plymouth, &c. in 1765 he was elected Knight of the Garter, and inſtalled July 25, 1771. As eldeſt ſon of the King he was born Duke of Cornwall. The firſt Prince of Wales was created by a charter, March 13, 1337, and to all the eldeſt ſons of the Kings of England. The Earldom of Cheſter was firſt conferred on the eldeſt ſon of the King of England in perpetuity, in 1247. The Hereditary Stewardſhip of Scotland, Duke of Rotheſay, Earl of Carrick, and Baron of Renfew, are Titles ſettled in 1398, on the eldeſt ſon of the King of Scotland; and from James the Firſt's acceſſion have been continued to the Prince of Wales in Great Britain. Born Aug. 12, 1762 (age 20.)

The moſt High, Puiſſant, and Illuſtrious Prince WILLIAM HENRY, Duke of Glouceſter, and Edinburgh, in Great Britain, Earl of Connaught in Ireland, created Nov. 14, 1764;

1764; General of his Majesty's Forces, Colonel of the First Regiment of Foot Guards, Chancellor of the University of Dublin, Ranger and Keeper of Windsor-Forest and Cranbourn-Chace, Ranger of Hampton-Court-Park, Warden and Keeper of New Forest in Hampshire, &c. Knight of the Garter and Thistle. Born Nov. 25, 1743 (age 39); married Sept. 6, 1766, Maria Countess Dowager of Waldegrave, daughter of Sir Edward Walpole, Knight of the Bath, by whom he has had one son and two daughters.

The most High, Puissant, and Illustrious Prince HENRY-FREDERICK, Duke of Cumberland and Strathern in Great Britain, and Earl of Dublin in Ireland, created Oct. 22, 1766; Ranger of Windsor Great Park, an Admiral of the White Squadron, and Knight of the Garter. Born Nov. 7, 1745 (age 37); married Oct. 1771, Anne, Widow of Christopher Horton, Esq; and daughter of Simon Luttrell, Viscount Carhampton and Baron Irnham in Ireland, but has had no issue.

TWENTY-ONE DUKES.

(Who have the Stile of The most Noble Prince, and sometimes, Most High and Puissant Prince.)

1. * CHARLES HOWARD, Duke of Norfolk, 1483; Earl Marshal, 1483; and Hereditary Earl Marshal, 1672; Earl of Arundel confirmed in 1433, by possession and inheritance of the castle of Arundel only, being the only local dignity in England, without any other creation; Earl of Surry, 1483; Earl of Norfolk, 1644; and Earl of Norwich, 1672; Baron of Mowbray, 1294; Baron Howard, by writ, 1470; Baron Segreve, Bruffa of Gower, Fitz-Allan, Warren, Clun, Oswaldestre, Maltravers, Greystock, Furnival, Verden, Lovetot, Strange of Blackmere, by descent; and Castle-rising in 1669; being Premier Duke, Earl, and Baron of England, next the Blood Royal, and chief of the family of Howards; from which are descended the present Earls of Effingham, Suffolk, and Carlisle. His Grace was born Dec. 1, 1720 (age 62); married March 8, 1739, Miss Brockholes (now living) by whom he has had two daughters, and Charles the present Earl of Surry, Deputy Earl Marshal, born 1746, who has been twice married, but has no issue. Upon the demise of the present Earl of Surry, without issue male, the honour will devolve on Henry Howard, of Sheffield, Esq; and his heirs.

OF PRECEDENCY.

THE order of precedency, which is observed in general, is thus, That persons of every degree of honour or dignity take place according to the seniority of their creation, and not of years, unless they are descended from the blood-royal; in which case, they have place of all others of the same degree.

The younger sons of the preceding rank take place from the eldest son of the next mediate, viz. the younger sons of dukes from the eldest sons of earls; the younger sons of earls from the eldest sons of barons. All the chain of precedency is founded upon this gradation, and thus settled by act of parliament, 31 Henry VIII. cap. 10, anno 1539.

But there have been since some alterations made in this act by several decrees and establishments in the succeeding reigns, whereby all the sons of viscounts and barons are allowed to precede baronets. And the eldest sons and daughters of baronets have place given them before the eldest sons and daughters of any knights, of what degree or order soever, though superior rior to that of a baronet; these being but temporary dignities, whereas that of baronets is hereditary: and the younger sons of baronets are to have place next after the eldest sons of knights.

Observe also, that as there are some great officers of state, who take place, although they are not noblemen, above the nobility of higher degree; so there are some persons, who, for their dignities in the church, degrees in the universities, and inns of court, officers in the state, or army, although they are neither knights, nor gentlemen born, yet take place amongst them. Thus, all colonels and field-officers who are honourable, as also the master of the ordnance, quarter-master general, doctors of divinity, law, physic, and music; deans, chancellors, prebendaries, heads of colleges in universities, and serjeants at law, are, by courtesy, allowed place before ordinary esquires. And all bachelors of divinity, law, physic, and music; masters of arts, barristers in the inns of court; lieutenant-colonels, majors, captains, and other commissioned military officers; and divers patent officers in the king's household, may equal, if not precede, any gentleman that has none of these qualifications.

In towns corporate, the inhabitants of cities are preferred to those of boroughs; and those who have borne magistracy, to all others. And herein a younger alderman takes not precedency from his senior by being knighted, or as being the elder knight, as was the case of Alderman Craven, who, though no knight, had place as senior alderman, before all the rest who were knights, at the coronation of king James. This is to be understood as to public meetings relating to the town; for it is doubted whether it will hold good in any neutral place. It has been also determined in the earl marshal's court of honour, that all who have been lord mayors of London, shall every where take place of all knights-bachelors, because they have been the king's lieutenants.

It is also quoted by Sir George Mackenzie, in his observations on precedency, that in the case of Sir John Crook, serjeant at law, it was adjudged by the judges in court, that such serjeants as were his seniors, though not knighted, should have preference notwithstanding his knighthood.—The precedency among men is as follows:

The KING, and Prince of WALES.

PRINCES of the BLOOD, viz. Sons, Grandsons, Brothers, Uncles, &c. of the king.

The

Knights of the Bath's eldeſt ſons.
Knights Bachelors eldeſt ſons.
Baronets younger ſons.
Eſquires by creation.
Eſquires by office.
Gentlemen.
Citizens.
Burgeſſes, &c.

The eſquires attending on knights of the Bath take place alſo from thoſe gentlemen who are reputed eſquires only during the time they are in office, and no longer; ſuch as high ſheriffs, juſtices of the peace, &c.

The precedency among men being known, that which is due to women, according to their ſeveral degrees, will be eaſily demonſtrated: but it is to be obſerved, that women, before marriage, have precedency by their father; with this difference between them and the male children, that the ſame precedency is due to all the daughters that belongs to the eldeſt; which is not ſo among the ſons; and the reaſon of this diſparity ſeems to be, that daughters all ſucceed equally, whereas the eldeſt ſon excludes all the reſt.

By marriage, a woman participates of her huſband's dignities; but none of the wife's dignities can come by marriage to her huſband, but are to deſcend to her next heir.

If a woman have precedency by creation, or birth, ſhe retains the ſame though ſhe marry a commoner: but if a woman nobly born marry any peer, ſhe ſhall take place according cording to the degree of her husband only, though she be a duke's daughter.

A woman, privileged by marriage with one of noble degree, shall retain the privilege due to her by her husband, though he should be degraded by forfeiture, &c. for crimes are personal.

The wife of the eldest son of any degree takes place of the daughters of the same degree, who always have place immediately after the wives of such eldest sons; and both of them take place of the younger sons of the preceding degree. Thus, the lady of the eldest son of an earl takes place of an earl's daughter, and both of them precede the wife of the younger son of a marquis; also the wife of any degree precedes the wife of the eldest son of the preceding degree. Thus, the wife of a marquis precedes the wife of the eldest son of a duke.
